Goalkeeper Incidents

What's the difference between the GK and other players?

Goalkeeper Incidents

What's the difference between the GK and other players?

- GK dresses differently
- GK can handle the ball in own Penalty Area
- GK can commit specific fouls
- Specific fouls can be committed against GK

Goalkeeper Incidents

What's NOT different between the GK and other players?

- The GK isn't really special when it comes to fouls.
- GK can (and does) commit fouls like any other player.

Goalkeeper Incidents

DFK Fouls by GK?

Would you allow a GK to raise their knee when taking the ball out of play?

If Yes, WHY?

Would you allow any other defender other than the GK to do the same?
GK has no more such privileges.

Goalkeeper Incidents

DFK Fouls by GK?

Should you protect the GK? ... YES

Should you overly protect the GK by allowing GK to play more aggressively than other players? NO

Your responsibility, as the referee, is to manage this dilemma.

Goalkeeper Incidents

DFK Fouls by GK?

GK subject to Law 12 - just like any other player

- PK awarded if the GK within own Penalty Area commits any one of the DFK fouls (except handling).

Goalkeeper Incidents

Specific IFK Fouls by GK?

IFK awarded to opposing team if:

- GK controls ball with hands for more than 6 seconds before releasing it into play
- GK touches ball with hands after releasing it into play before ball is touched by another player
- GK touches ball with hands after it's deliberately kicked to them by a teammate
- GK touches ball with hands after receiving it directly from a throw-in by a teammate

Goalkeeper Incidents

Specific Fouls Against GK?

- IFK awarded if the opposing team prevents the GK from releasing the ball from their hands

GK Incident – Food for Thought

A GK playing the ball with his feet, kicks the ball to his teammate 10 yards outside the Penalty Area.

The teammate kicks the ball back to the GK and the GK dribbles it with his feet to the other side of Penalty Area and then kicks it back to the same teammate.

This teammate receives the ball and he kicks it back to the GK again.

The GK then dribbles the ball around the Penalty Area with his feet, before kicking it again to the same teammate.

The opposing players are not moving toward the ball.

When does this become time wasting?

GK Incident – Food for Thought

When does this become time wasting?

Never !!

The GK can play the ball with his feet just like any other player .

Passing the ball back and forth may serve the same purpose and appear to be “wasting time”, but in reality they are legally “managing time”.

Opponents should become actively involved in play to prevent this from occurring.
